Wednesday evening Mr. Fred Herrera tied his horse to an awning post in front of his store, adjoining THE OASIS office. Something frightened the horse, and in his efforts to get away he brought down the awning with a crash, loosening himself and running away. Fortunately no one was hurt, but there were several narrow escapes.

Monday work was begun breaking ground for a retaining wall along International street on the property of Governor Ramon Corral, adjoining the Plaza de Trece de Julio, where he intends erecting his summer residence. Erection of the handsome structure contemplated by the gentleman will begin when he can perfect his plans and arrangements and give his attention thereto.

At five o'clock Monday morning Prof. B. C. Hendricks, who had been in poor health some time, passed away, and was buried at evening of the same day by the Nogales lodge of Masons of which the deceased was a member. Professor Hendricks was principal of the Nogales public school in 1895, and since that year has had charge of the school at Wilcox. He was well known in both places and well liked. He leaves a wife and child to lament his loss.

Monday the stonework and foundation for the new residence of Presidente Ignacio Bonillas of Nogales, Sonora, were completed. The premises abut on the south side of International street, and extend from Pesqueira street to Juarez street, with a depth of 140 feet and a frontage of fifty feet on each of the two last named thoroughfares. A stone wall has been constructed to protect the ground on two sides and for a foundation of the structure. It goes to a depth of six feet and rises to a height of two feet above the highest point on Pesqueira street. The arroyo crosses Juarez street at the intersection of International street, and at that point the wall describes a powerful arch capable of withstanding the most tremendous pressure from water to which it may be subjected in times of flood. Work on the brick superstructure has already begun. It extends the full front on Pesqueira street (facing the Plaza Trece de Julio) and to a depth of thirty-six feet. Amable Anteroch is the contractor who has done the stonework; E. R. Jones is doing the brick work; James Vandervort is the architect and contractor for the wood work.
